

ncce in a Season of Reform and Renewed Hope

Nigeria's education sector is in a critical season of reform, renewal, and repositioning. Across the country, there is a growing recognition that the future of national development depends on the quality of education, the strength of institutions, and the preparedness of teachers.

Within this context, the National Commission for Colleges of Education has an important role to play.

The Commission sits at the intersection of teacher quality, institutional standards, professional preparation, and national education transformation. Its work directly affects the Colleges of Education that prepare teachers for Nigeria's classrooms. This is why the current reform conversation around teacher education is timely and necessary.

The Renewed Hope Agenda of President Bola Ahmed Tinubu, GCFR, places strong emphasis on human capital development, inclusive growth, institutional strengthening, and national productivity. Teacher education is central to all these priorities. No nation can build strong human capital without teachers.

No education system can deliver meaningful reform without capable classrooms. No classroom can succeed without prepared educators.

Under the visionary leadership of the Honourable Minister of Education, Dr. Maruf Tunji Alausa, the education sector is being challenged to think differently, collaborate more deliberately, and pursue reforms that are practical, measurable, and future-focused.

For NCCE, this means a stronger call to action.

It means strengthening Colleges of Education.

It means restoring confidence in teacher education.

It means supporting innovation and quality assurance.

It means expanding pathways into teaching.

It means promoting dignity for the teaching profession.

It means ensuring that Nigeria has the teachers it needs for the future it desires.

The reform of teacher education is not a side issue. It is a national priority.

NCCE is positioned to help lead this new direction with courage, clarity, competence, and collaboration
